

To all our friends and comrades,

Under the auspices of the events marking 70 years since the Fatherland's Liberation War has reached its armistice, I'd like to call everyone to take part on a thorough historical research on every aspect of this period. In Rio de Janeiro, we will host, alongside other entities that study the DPRK, an event with the country's Ambassador to Brazil. It will be an important gathering not just to honor those who fell fighting against imperialism, but also to fully explain what really happened when the vile regime of Syngman Rhee started provoking the North, under his insane idea of vanquishing the communists from the Peninsula. He wasn't just megalomaniac in his ideas, but also in his actions. Massacres in Jeju and Yeosu Suncheon made clear that his stance was to kill as many communists as he could.

The brave people of left-wing organizations throughout Korea resisted, and they fought bravely to overthrow Rhee. But he was a mere puppet of a greater enemy, and this one, the U.S., has considered blowing the entire northern part of the country with atomic weapons but, even if demoted from this idea, blew up everything they could with conventional weaponry. Korea was devastated and the master of puppets, with its minions from the entire world, thought they could defeat the People's Army. The resistance was fierce and the fighting continued. With the support from hundreds of thousands of brothers from the People's Republic of China, the situation found new balance. A balance and an agreement to cease hostilities, but no true end to the war until this day.

The forgotten war for the invaders, as they have failed, was left behind, but not the provocations. A victorious DPRK emerged from the ashes of the bombs that fell. But the provocations are still standing and to us there's nothing clearer than the right of the DPRK to use all means necessary to prevent the imperialist country, and its puppet, from attacking again.

If you get to know about Korean History, then you will realize that there's nothing wrong with DPRK's actions. Au contraire, my friends. From our perspective, History is as clear as the need to defend the People's Korea, and you can count on me for that, once more!

With our warm regards,
